

Global equity markets were mixed, as investors took a cautious stance amidst heightened volatility following the US healthcare vote withdrawal. Likewise, US Treasury yields dipped slightly and the DXY fell due to uncertainty in US politics.

- ✓ The local equities index declined by 0.43%, closing at 7,269.62, primarily driven by the highest net foreign selling since December 2016. Capital outflow is expected by the BSP given its decision to maintain interest rates.
- ✓ In the local fixed income market, prices dropped, with yield rising an average of 20.94bps, as investors look for higher yields elsewhere, following the BSP announcement to maintain the current interest rate policy.

- ✓ US stocks slipped following the withdrawal of the Republican healthcare vote, underscoring concerns on the likelihood of Trump's pro-growth policies being approved by Congress. The S&P 500 declined 0.08% to 2,343.98, while the DJIA tumbled 0.29% to 20,596.72.
- ✓ European shares edged lower despite strong March PMI figures out of France, Germany, and the Eurozone as market players adopted a flight-to-safety stance ahead of the US healthcare vote. The MSCI Europe lost 0.19%.
- ✓ Asian equities traded sideways with an upward bias on bargain hunting ahead of movements in US politics. The MSCI APxJ gained 0.08%.
- ✓ US Treasuries ended slightly higher as market players favored relatively safer assets amid growing concerns over the viability of the reflation trade brought about by Trump's pro-growth policies. On average, US Treasury yields fell 0.33 bps, and 10-year yields lost 0.71 bps to 2.4123%.
